

Liesl Orr is a senior labour and gender researcher with over 25 years' experience in worker organisation and the changing world of work. She is Acting Co-Director (Research) at NALEDI, working with trade unions on organisational renewal, gender equality, and digitalisation. Grounded in feminist and social justice approaches, she holds a Master of Social Science in Industrial Sociology from the University of Cape Town.

Liesl Orr is a senior labour and gender researcher with over 25 years' experience in work, worker organisation, and worker education. She is Acting Co-Director (Research) at NALEDI, where she leads research on organisational renewal, gender equality, and the changing world of work, including the impact of digitalisation.

Her work is grounded in social justice and feminist approaches to labour research, with a focus on strengthening worker education, addressing gender-based violence in the world of work, and advancing recognition of the care economy.

She works closely with trade unions to translate research into policy-relevant analysis and practical tools for collective bargaining, education, and organising, supporting equity, inclusion, and transformation in the world of work.